Aimee Taylor makes a decision that will haunt her forever. Unfortunately life doesn't come with a do over; therefore, she makes the best out of what she has.

An unforeseen circumstance brings these two together again, even though, neither can explain how or why the other seems so familiar. As love tries to heal this wounded couple, a common adversary seeks to destroy.

Due to strong language, sexual content, and violence, this book is intended for 18+.

Excerpt from Branded (Nik)

We entered the penthouse, and I immediately led her towards one of the spare bedrooms. It was a crucial error on my end. How did I expect myself not to touch her when she was under the same roof? The smell of her lured me to her side. As I opened the door for her, I informed, "You can sleep here in the guestroom." She was so weary I wasn't sure she'd make it to the bed. When she stumbled over her own two feet, I clutched her elbow to keep her from faceplanting onto the floor. My God, she was beautiful. I had to divert my gaze before I did something impetuous.

Her eyes were heavy as she curled up under the covers. As I turned off the lamp on the nightstand, she grabbed my hand. "Stay. Please?" she slurred.

Oh, hell no. I did not have the strength for that. I brushed my fingertips along her cheekbone. "I'll be right here, little one," I reassured. "I'm not going anywhere. Rest, now."
