...follow to the spot selected by the bird it was preceded by, eventually a hollow would be formed at that spot which would give each post a unique sound. So, after the posts had been raised and some time had passed, one didn't have to look at the fence to determine where the sound of the bird was coming from or the time of day. This process of arriving at knowing the time by the sound of the post could be accelerated by using different materials for each post. Time was spoken of in terms of flats and sharps. For instance, the time of day could be Mixolydian sharp or Aeolian flat, or Mixolydian sharp flat or Aeolian flat sharp. Mixolydian, Mixolydian minor, was everyone's favorite time of day. The crops growing in their fields are fish, primarily Cod, and chicken bones. The fish are for the table. The chicken...[Contents:Original story illustration (gouache) and handwritten text.]
