Not illustrated. 1858 Excerpt: ...the two. But what an alternative. There was then no railroad, nor stage coach, nor spanker wagon. If they would go on land they must go on foot. I, at that time, being seven months old, was not required to walk. My honored mother carried me in her arms fifty miles from Erie westward. Here we were met by teams, with which our friends had started back in search of us. At length the Cuyahoga was reached. That was then the western boundary of civilization, so far as the lake shore region is concerned. No team and no white woman, except the Canadian French, had ever crossed that stream. Our destination was the township of Columbia. The township had been surveyed the previous summer, and some logs had been rolled up for a cabin, but your present speaker was the first baby, his venerable mother the first woman, and ours the first team, that ever crossed the Cuyahoga river at Cleveland. Thence onward we were strictly pioneers.--The company were Bela Bronson, wife and child, Levi Bronson, John Williams, and Walter Strong. More than four months from the time of leaving Connecticut, we plunged into the forest west of Cleveland. As our party cut their own road, eight days were consumed in reaching Columbia, twenty miles distant. We camped in our wagons, till our house could be built, for the logs that had been rolled up were not in the place where we were to live. But on Christmas day our cabin was chinked and mudded, ready to be occupied. Of the party that came first from Cleveland my mother and myself are now the only survivors. Taking into account the time of arrival, the last of December, that no home was ready for occupancy, that in the company was a mother with an infant only eight months old, and twenty miles distant the nearest dwelling, we have before us a rar...
